The Panoply moves forward

The Panoply has announced a small acquisition, an IT services group (Arthurly) which appears to be a good strategic fit with the Notbinary unit. We make no changes to forecasts given the small scale of the acquired business, but the deal adds some useful (mainly Microsoft Azure) skills, and demonstrates that group remains active despite the COVID-19 lockdown.

- Deal details Arthurly is being acquired for some £0.4m initial consideration (part cash, part shares) on a cash-free, debt-free basis. Deferred consideration of up to an additional £1.1m may be payable, contingent on the unit's performance up to September 2021. Arthurly has been working partly in conjunction with Notbinary, but its unrelated (external) contracts have generated around £0.4m over the last twelve months, and a modest operating profit.
- Strategic fit and skills acquired Notbinary has been working on a number of projects in tandem with Arthurly, so the business is well known to The Panoply. Arthurly has strong skills around in particular Microsoft's cloud platform Azure, as well as the cloud offerings from Google (GCP) and Amazon (AWS). These skills have been put to good use in a range of clients including North Bristol NHS Trust, British Red Cross and a number of local authority and central government departments. The unit clearly adds to the Cloud computing skillset within Notbinary, and we believe that given the ongoing migration toward Cloud delivery, the strategic rationale is clear. The Panoply has already demonstrated its ability to acquire small businesses and help them evolve, and hopefully the Arthurly transaction will replicate this success.
- Three key positives We see three key positives within this deal. Firstly, as described above, the deal is a good operational and strategic fit, adding useful skills and good reference customers. Secondly, it demonstrates that The Panoply is not being held back from its ambition during the COVID-19 lockdown. Thirdly, our decision to not alter forecasts is hopefully a prudent one, as it very modestly derisks forecasts assuming a small positive contribution from Arthurly over time.

Overall, we see this deal as a useful step forward – a relatively small and lowrisk acquisition, but demonstrating intent on the part of the group, and bringing useful additional skills into the enlarged group.
